Group 1 under 50 hens, Grace Conditt leads with the average number as 14.5, Mrs. Hannah Belt second with 8.7 eggs. In the group of 50 to 100, Mr. M. L. Kennedy leads with the average number of eggs as 16.5; Mrs. Paul I. Paris second with 16.14 eggs and Mrs. Willie Daughtrey 3rd with 14.5 eggs. Japan Clover

Japan clover or lespedeza is spreading by its own effort over much of the "laid out" land of the state and furnishing good grazing on several million acres of poor soil at a season of the year when pastures are likely to be short. Being a legume it is a soil builder, no soils are too poor or sour for the clover.

Altho the crop will usually come in without seeding it ordinarily requires four or five years to secure a thick stand depending upon the wild growth. If seeded a stand can be secured more quickly. A good combination for poor land is composed of five pounds of red top and 10 pounds of Japan clover an acre. The red top supplies early pasture while the clover comes on for summer and fall pasture which lasts until frost. Seed early in the spring, March or April being a good time. In the past the clover has not received the appreciation it deserves largely because it is observed on land too poor to grow anything else put on good soil the growth is much heavier.

Freshening Season Important

The time of year that a cow freshens seems to have considerable to do with the profit she returns says the United States Department of Agriculture. An analysis of the figures obtained from many cow testing associations shows that in most sections the cows that freshen in the fall and early winter produce the most milk and butter fat and bring in the greatest income over cost of feed.

HENRY & HENRY

NEW CORPORATION FOR MARION

The energetic and business men of Marion know a good thing when they see it. John Glass, one of our townsmen, recently invented and patented a device for delivering and receiving mail from fast moving trains at stations where they make no stops. Mr. Glass showed his invention to a number of business men of Marion who immediately took advantage of an opportunity to purchase same and have formed and incorporated a company for the purpose of marketing this device for the use of the railroad. The present system used by the railroads is unsatisfactory and expensive. This new invention will no doubt be adopted by every railroad in the country.

The company is incorporated under the laws of Kentucky and is composed of 21 of Marion's best business men. The company held its first official meeting February 27th and the following officers and directors were elected: J. N. Boston, President; S. M. Jenkins, V. Pres.; E. L. Harpending, Sec-Treas.; R. F. Wheeler, H. V. Stone, J. H. Mayes, T. H. Cochran and E. M. McFee were elected directors.

The company has employed A. Gustafson of Chicago to install the first trial station, which will be located near the Kentucky Fluor Spar Mill on the I. C. R. R. This project will no doubt be watched with great interest.

CARD OF THANKS

My sincere thanks are tendered to my neighbors and friends who gave me their aid and comfort during a trying time, the illness and death of my mother, Mrs. Mary Perry. Their kind sympathy in words and good deeds, is greatly appreciated by myself and family.

NEWS IN BRIEF

John T. Roach, Sheriff of Graves county, was shot and killed in his office at Mayfield Monday by Sam Galloway, a former deputy, who had resigned the day before. He came into the office and they had some words about his salary. During the argument Galloway went to the safe and took out the Sheriff's own pistol and shot him three times in the breast, killing him instantly. Roach was an ex-serice man and a Captain in the World War. Galloway was instantly jailed.

The February term of Circuit court at Madisonville was a record breaker. During its four weeks session 40 persons were convicted and eight of these were sentenced to the penitentiary at Eddyville. A number received jail sentences and others were fined. A majority of the convictions were for violation of the liquor laws. Fines imposed during the term will amount to $8,000.

At Frankfort the House Monday by a standing vote of 47 to 33 voted a $75,000 increase in the 1922-25 budget appropriation for the University of Kentucky to be used for building purposes.

The Kentucky Senate at Frankfort Monday by a vote of 18 to 17 killed the Griffin-Kelly bill providing for election of county school superintendents by a direct vote of the people.

PETER AND THE SISTERS.

Synopsis—Doctor Strickland, retired, is living in Mill Valley, near San Francisco. His family consists of his daughters, Alix, 21, and Cherry, 18, and Anne, his niece, 24. Their closest friend is Peter Joyce, a lovable sort of recluse. Martin Lloyd, a visiting mining engineer, wins Cherry, marries her and carries her off to El Nido, a mine town. Peter realizes that he loves Cherry. Justin Little wooes Anne. Cherry comes home for Anne's wedding.

"Well, we won't go into that!" her father interrupted her, hastily, for Alix had aired these views before and he was not in sympathy with them. "And I guess you're right: the child is a woman now, with a woman's responsibilities," he added. "And her place is with her husband. They'll have to solve life together, to learn to gether. I'll speak to Cherry!"

Alix, watching him walk away, thought that she had never seen Dad look old before. She saw the shadow on his kind face all the rest of that day.

It was only the next morning when he opened the question with Cherry. It was a brilliant morning, with spring already in the air. Cherry, on the porch steps, was reading a letter from Martin. Her father sat down beside her. She had on one of her old gowns and, bathed in soft sunlight, looked eighteen again. The air was sweet and pungent and damp and fresh, the sky high and blue, and across the granite face of Tamsalpais a last scarf of mist was floating.

"Well, what has Martin to say?" asked the doctor.

"Oh, he doesn't like it much!" Cherry said, making a little face. "He describes the village as perfectly hopeless. He's moved into the little house in E street, and gotten two stoves up."

"And when does he want his girl?" her father pursued.

"He doesn't say," Cherry answered, innocently. "I think he is really happier to have me here, where he knows I am well off!" she said. "I know I am," she ended after a moment's thought.

Her father was conscious of a pang; he had not even formed the thought in his own mind that Cherry was unhappy. The child, he told himself, had a good husband, a home and health, and undeveloped resources within herself. It was puzzling and painful to him to realize that there was needed something more—and that that something was lacking. He felt a sudden anger at Martin; why wasn't Martin managing this affair?

"Mart doesn't mention any time!" he mused.

"Thanks to you!" Cherry said, dimpling mischievously. "He wrote quite firmly, just before Christmas," she added, "but I told him that Dad had been such an angel and liked so much to have me here—" And Cherry's smile was full of childish triumph.

"My dear," her father said, spurred to sudden courage by a realization that the matter might easily become serious, "you mustn't abuse his generosity. Suppose you write that you'll join him—this is March—suppose you say the first of April!"

Cherry flushed and looked down. Her lips trembled. There was a moment of unhappy silence.

"Very well, Dad," she said in a low voice. A second later she had jumped to her feet and vanished in the house. Her father roamed the woods in wretched misgivings, coming in at lunch time to find her in her place, smiling, but traces of tears about her lovely eyes.

Nothing more was said for a day or two, and then Cherry read aloud to the family an affectionate letter in which Martin said that everything would be ready for her whenever she came now.

CHAPTER VII.

The last day of March and of Cherry's visit broke clear and blue, and with it spring seemed to have come on a rush of perfume and green beauty. Days had been soft and warm before; this day was hot, and flushed with color and splendor.

Alix and Cherry washed each other's hair in the old fashion, and came trailing down with towels and combs to the garden. The doctor joined them in the midst of their tossing and spreading, and sat smoking peacefully on the porch steps.

"Oh, heavens, how I love this sort of weather!" Alix exclaimed, flinging her brown mane backward, her tall figure slender in a faded kimono. "Dad and Peter," she went on, suddenly sitting erect, "will get all this clean hair full of cigar smoke tonight, so what's the use, anyway?"

"Tonight's the night we go to Peter's?" Cherry stated rather than asked. "Do you remember," she glanced at her father, who was reading his paper, "do you remember when Dad always used to scold us for being rude to Peter?"

"Well, I'd rather go to Peter's for dinner than anywhere else I ever go!" Alix remarked, dreamily. "Seriously, I mean it!" she repeated as Cherry looked at her in amused surprise. "In the first place, I love his bungalow—tiny as it is, it has the whole of a little canyon to itself, and the prettiest view in the valley, I think. And then I love the messy sitting room, with all the books and music, and I love the way Peter entertains. I wish," she added, simply, "that I liked Peter half as well as I do his house!"

"Peter's a dear!" Cherry contended. "Oh, I know he is!" Alix said, quickly. "Peter's always been a dear, of course. But I mean in a special sense—" finished Alix with an entirely unembarrassed grin.

Cherry, through a glittering cloud of hair, looked at her steadily. Suddenly she gave an odd laugh.

"Do you know I never thought of Peter like that?" she said.

Alix nodded with a cautious look at her father, who was out of hearing.

"No, nor I! We've always taken him rather for granted," she admitted. "Only I've been rather wishing, lately, that Peter wasn't such an unflattering, nig-brotherish, every-day-neighbor sort of person."

Cherry regarded her steadily, with an awakening look in her eyes.

"Why lately?" she asked.

"Because," said Alix, briskly and unromantically, "I think Peter would like me to—well, to stop taking him for granted! I imagine he's awfully lonely. And then I imagine it would please Dad—"

"Dad has always been ridiculously fond of him," Cherry said, thoughtfully. Peter—possibly in love with Alix! She had never even suspected it. Well, there was something rather pleasant in the thought, after all, if Alix didn't mind his ugliness and thinness. Cherry thought about it all day. She had no thought of money a year or two ago; but she was more experienced now. And Peter was rich. Ordinarily she would have said that she was not going to change for Peter's dinner; but this afternoon, without mentioning the fact, she quietly got into one of her prettiest dresses; a dress that had been made in the long-ago excitement of troussau days. Peter as a rather autocratic and critical neighbor was one thing; as a possible brother-in-law he was another.

She came downstairs to find her father waiting, and they walked away through the woods together. Alix had already gone up to Peter's house to play tennis. They walked slowly through the lovely aisles of the trees, crossing a road or two, climbing steadily upward under great redwoods. Cherry's skirt brushed the gold dust from masses and masses of buttercups. The tennis was over, but just over; Peter and Alix were sitting, still panting, on the rail of the wide, open porch, and shouted as the others came up.

"You missed doubles!" called Alix. "The grandest we ever did! Doubles with the Thompsons and three sets straight to us—six-two, six-two, and six-two again! They've gone. Oh, heavens, I never had such tennis. Oh, Peter, when you stood there at the net and just curved your hand like a cup—Alix gave an enthusiastic imitation—and over she went, and game and set!"

Cherry, sinking white and frilly into a chair, smiled indulgently. The walk had given her a wild-rose color, and even Alix was struck with her extraordinary beauty. Alix had wheeled about on the rail to face the porch, and Peter had gotten to his feet and was hospitably pushing basket chairs about. Now he gave Alix a critical look.

"You're disgracefully dirty!" he said, fraternally.

"I know it," she answered, calmly. "Have I time to tub?"

"All the time in the world!" he answered.

Alix departed.

"It's very pleasant to me to have Alix so much at home here," Cherry said, when Alix was gone, and the doctor wandering happily about the garden. "I don't know what we'd do if any one ever usurped our places here!"

She had said it deliberately; the fascination of her recent discovery was too strong to resist. The man flushed suddenly. For a full minute he did not speak, and Cherry was surprised to find herself a little thrilled and even frightened by his silence.

"What put that into your head?" he asked, presently, smoking with his eyes fixed upon the valley far below. "Perhaps it's because there are so many changes, Peter; my marriage, Anne's—everything different. It just came to me that it is nice to have this always the same."

"Perhaps Alix will come up here and help keep it so some day," the man said, deliberately. Cherry's look of elaborate surprise and pleasure died before his serious glance. She was silent for a moment.

"Why don't you ask her?" she said in a low, thoughtful tone, trembling, eager to preserve his mood without a false note.

"I have," he answered simply. Cherry's heart jumped with a sudden unexpected emotion. What was it? Not pleasure, not all surprise—surely there could be no jealousy mixed with her feeling for Peter's plans? But she was dazed with the rush of feeling; hurt in some fashion she could not stop to dissect now.

"And she said no?" she stammered in confusion.

"She said no. Or, at least, I intimated that I was a lonely old affectionate man with this and that to offer, and she intimated that that wasn't enough. I ought to have said—I ought to explain—that I had told her, only a few days previously, that I had always loved somebody else!"

"Oh-h-h!" Cherry was enlightened. She visualized an affair in the last years of the old century for Peter.

"Oh, and—and she didn't love you?" Cherry asked.

"The lady? She was unfortunately married before I had a chance to ask her," said Peter.

"Oh-h-h!" Cherry said again, impressed, "and you'll never get over it?" she asked, timidly. "Peter, I never knew that!" she added as he was silent. "Does—does Dad know?"

"Nobody knows but Alix, and she only knows the bare facts," he assured her.

"Oh!" Cherry could think of nothing to add to the sympathetic little monosyllable.

"Finished with the shower!" shrieked Alix from the warm darkness inside the doorway. "Hurry up, Peter, something smells utterly grand!"

"That's the chicken thing!" Peter shouted back, springing up to disappear in the direction of the bathroom. Cherry sat on, silent, wrapped still in the new spell of the pleasant voice, the strangely appealing and yet masterful personality.

The dinner straggled as all Peter's dinners did; Alix mixed a salad dressing; Peter himself flashed in and out of the tiny hot kitchen a hundred times. Now, in immaculate linen, came back and forth in leisurely table-setting. Suddenly everything was ready; the crisp, smoking-hot French loaf, the big brown jar of bubbling and odorous chicken, the lettuce curled in its bowl, the long-necked bottles in their straw cases, and cheeses and crackers and olives and figs and tiny fish in oil and marmos in fluted paper that were a part of all Peter's dinners.

After dinner they watched the moon rise, until Alix drifted in to the piano and Peter followed her, and the others came in, too, to sit beside the fire. As usual it was midnight before any one thought of ending one of Peter's evenings.

And all through the pleasant, quiet hours, and when he bundled them up in his own big loose coats to drive them home, Cherry was thinking of him in this new light; Peter loving a woman, and denied. The knowledge seemed to fling a strange glamor about him; she saw new charm in him, or perhaps, as she told herself, she saw for the first time how charming he really was. His speech seemed actually the pleasant for the stammer at which they had all laughed years ago; the slight limp lent its own touch of individuality, and the man's blunt criticisms of books and music, politics and people, were softened by his humor, his genuine humility, and his eager hospitality.

Next day she took occasion to mention Peter and his affairs to Alix. Alix turned fiery red, but laughed hardily.

"If he considers that an offer, he can consider it a refusal, I guess," she said, boyishly embarrassed. "I like him—I'm crazy about him. But I don't want any party in ringlets and crinolines to come floating from the dead past over my child's innocent cradle—"

"Alix, you're awful!" Cherry laughed. "You couldn't talk that way if you loved him!"

Alix laughed. "I suppose I ought to be a mass of blushes. The truth is, I like kids, and I don't like husbands—"

"You don't know anything about husbands!" Cherry laughed.

"I know lots of men I'd like to go off with for a few months," Alix pursued. "But then I'd like to come home again! I don't see why that isn't perfectly reasonable—"

"Well, it's not!" Cherry declared almost crossly. "That isn't marriage. You belong where your husband is, and you—you are always glad to be with him—"

"But suppose you get tired of him, like a job or a boarding-house, or any of your other friends?" Alix persisted idly.

"Well, you aren't supposed to!" Cherry said, feebly. Alix let her have the last word; it was only due to her superior experience, she thought crossly. But half an hour later, lying wakeful, and thinking that she would miss dear old Cherry tomorrow, she fancied she heard something like a sob from Cherry's bed, and her whole heart softened with sympathy for her sister.

They came downstairs together the next day in midafternoon, both bathed and wrapped for the trip, for Peter was to take Cherry as far as Sausalito in the car, and Martin by a fortunate chance was to meet them there at the ferryboat for San Francisco. Mill Valley was not more than an hour's ride from the ferry. Alix was to drive down and return with Peter. Cherry said good-by to her father on the porch; she seemed more of a puzzled child than ever.

"I've had a wonderful visit, Dad—" she began bravely. Suddenly the tears came. She buried her face against her father's shabby old office coat and his arms went about her. Alix laughed awkwardly, and Peter shut his teeth. Anne, who had very properly come over to say good-by to her cousin, got in the back seat of the car and Alix took the seat beside her.

Cherry saw in Peter's expression something that she did not forget for many, many months—never quite forgot. His eyes were fixed upon her with something so yearning, so loving, so troubled in their gaze that a thrill went through Cherry from head to foot. He instantly averted his look, turned to the car, fumbled with the gears; they were off.

Cherry, tied trimly into a hat that was all big daisies, was silent for a while. But when Alix and Anne commenced an interested conversation in the back seat, she suddenly said regretfully:

"Oh, I hate to go away this time! I mind it more even than the first time!"

Peter, edging smoothly about a wide blue puddle, nodded sympathetically, but did not answer.

"I envy Alix—" (Cherry said in idle mischief. She knew that the subject was not a safe one, but was irresistibly impelled to pursue it.

"Alix?" said Peter, after a silence long enough to make her feel ashamed of herself.

"Yes. Her young man lives in Mill Valley, right near home!" elucidated Cherry.

"Am I Alix's young man?" he asked, amused.

"Well, aren't you?"

"I don't know. I've never been any one's young man," said Peter.

"Whoever the woman who treated you meanly is—I hate her!" Cherry began again. "Unless," she added, "unless she was very young, and you never told her!"

He did not answer, and they spun along in utter silence. But when they were nearing Sausalito, Cherry said almost timidly:

"I think perhaps it would make her happy—and proud, to know that you admired her, Peter. I don't know who she is, of course, but almost any woman would feel that. I shall often think of that talk we had a week ago, and—think of you, too. N-next time you fall in love I hope you will be luckier!"

Silence. But he gave her his quick, friendly smile. Cherry dared not speak again.

"Last stop—all out!" Alix exclaimed. "You get tickets, Peter. Hurry, there's Martin!"

Unexpectedly Martin's big figure came toward them from the ferry gate. Some one from the mine had to be assayed in San Francisco, and he had volunteered to make the trip so that he might meet his wife and bring her back with him to Red Creek. Time hanging on his hands in the city, he had crossed the bay for the pleasure of the return trip with Cherry. He met them beamingly. There was a little confusion of greeting and good-bys. Alix and Peter watched the others at the railing until the ferryboat turned. Martin smiled over Anne's head; Cherry, both little white-gloved hands on the rail, blue eyes and a glint of bright hair showing under the daisies on her hat, her small figure enveloped in a big loose coat, looked as if she would like to cry again.

"You'd go back to your father, I suppose," Martin said, yawning.

TRAP NESTS HELP BREEDERS

Enable Poultrymen to Find Profitable Layers by Selecting Late Molting Hens.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Trap-nesting hens to find the most profitable layers does not appeal to the average farmer and back-yard poultryman as being practical. Besides the original cost of making the nests there is the extra labor required of looking after the layers. However, some facts that have been learned as a result of using the trap nest may be applied in the improvement of the flock, say poultrymen of the United States Department of Agriculture. For instance, the trap nest has shown that the late molter is the most profitable bird in the flock. Now, with the use of the trap nest, a man may select the late molter and be sure that he is picking the cream of the flock. And it seems reasonable to believe that this characteristic breeds on from generation to generation.

AX IS BEST FOR EGG EATERS

Habit Spreads From One Fowl to Another and Unless Checked Affects Whole Flock.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Egg eating sometimes becomes a serious vice in a flock, the fowls becoming very fond of eggs when they have learned to eat them. The habit spreads from fowl to fowl and unless checked will often spread through the whole flock. Egg eating usually begins through accident by eggs being broken or frozen. See that the nests are properly supplied with straw or other nesting material and have them darkened, so that if an egg is accidentally broken the fowls will not be likely to discover it. Supply plenty of lime in the form of oyster shells, bone or similar substances to insure a firm shell. As soon as it is discovered that a fowl has formed the habit, the fowl should be removed to prevent the spread of the vice. Once formed, it is difficult to eradicate, and the safest remedy is the death penalty, say poultry specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Fowls sometimes pluck feathers from themselves and from each other. This is often caused by too close confinement, by the presence of insect pests, or by improper feeding. When some of the fowls of a flock have formed the habit slightly, a wide range with a change of diet, including a plentiful supply of animal feed, and freedom from insect pests, will usually correct the evil. Above all, see that the fowls have plenty of inducement to exercise. If the habit becomes well formed it is very troublesome and may necessitate the killing of some of the fowls in order to stop it.

YEARLY EGG LAYING PERIOD

Increase Made at Massachusetts Experiment Station by Selection of Pullets.

Dr. H. D. Goodale, research biologist in poultry at the Massachusetts Experimental station, stated that the yearly egg-laying period of a flock of hens at that place had been increased by an average of 58 days by egg selection from early-laying pullets. This, he said, had resulted in an increase in the number of winter eggs, raising the annual egg average from 121 to 185. Poultry breeders should aim to eliminate broody hens from breeding stock; also the birds idle longest in the winter months.

Keep house and yard clean.

Provide roosts and dropping boards.

Provide a nest for each four or five hens.

Save the manure. It is worth money if treated properly.

The early hatched chick becomes the early laying pullet next fall.

Make the house dry and free from drafts, but allow for ventilation.

Kill and eat the poorest hens in the fall when they begin to molt and cease to lay.

VII. WHY GOOD MEN DODGE

The government service must look largely to the graduates from colleges and universities in recruiting for its technical work. Replies to an inquiry addressed to some forty of the leading colleges and universities of the country to discover what class of men took civil service examinations, whether the number is decreasing and, if so, the reasons, disclose vividly what the training schools of technical and scientific men think about the government as an employer. They warn their graduates against government service, and the graduates heed the warning. Carnegie Institute of Technology, at Pittsburgh, reports:

It is certainly true that the best of our graduates are not interested in government employment because they feel that, first of all, it does not pay adequate salaries, nor does it offer opportunity for advancement that private enterprise does. This spring I interviewed all the members of the graduating class, except the women, and none of them would consider government employment, although there were many positions open. There are now about 1500 male graduates of the institute, and I will venture to state that not more than ten are employed by the government.

Replies of similar tenor and import were received from the University of Chicago, Leland Stanford University, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Princeton University, Indiana University, and the University of Wisconsin.

Inequality of compensation is one of the chief reasons that deter scientific men from going into the government service. Congress fixes the salaries of most of the government employees. I can give a concrete illustration of how it determines the salaries of scientific men.

Dr. Leland O. Howard and Dr. Edward W. Nelson are two scientists in the employ of the government who have national reputations.

The appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture was under consideration in the house on January 30th, 1920. The secretary of agriculture had been recommending for five or six years that Doctor Howard's salary be increased from $4,500 to $5,000. He proposed it again in that year's bill. When the item was reached in the discussion on the floor, this colloquy ensued:

Mr. Stafford—Mister Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. Is the entomologist whose salary you propose to increase the same person recommended for an increase last year?

Mr. Lever—Yes, he has been in the government service many, many years.

Mr. Lever—I concede it.

Mr. McLaughlin of Michigan—Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. Stafford—I will reserve it.

Mr. McLaughlin—The committee made the recommendation to increase the salary $500, took testimony on it and considered it very carefully. In our judgment the increase in salary ought to be made for an official who has been in the department, as the chairman says, for a long time at the head of this bureau. He has performed able and faithful services. The salary is less than that paid to the heads of other bureaus. We felt, after listening to all that was said, and with a knowledge of the work he has been doing and has done, the salary proposed is not too large.

Mr. Stafford—How long has he been there?

Mr. Lever—He has been there forty-two years.

Mr. Stafford—What is his age?

Mr. Lever—Over sixty, perhaps nearer seventy, but he is still vigorous and able to do good work. He is one of the greatest entomologists in the world.

The Chairman—The point of order is sustained.

Five minutes later the matter of Doctor Nelson's salary was reached. The secretary of agriculture recommended an increase of his pay from $3,500 to $4,000. This happened:

Mr. Stafford—Mister Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. Will the chairman of the committee inform the house as to how long a biologist has been in the service of the government and how long he has been receiving the present salary of $3,500, on which you recommend an increase of $500?

Mr. Lever—Mister Chairman, this gentleman, whose name is Nelson, has been in the service of the department since November, 1896. He has served as chief field naturalist from 1907 to 1912, and was assistant in charge of the biological investigation, from 1912 to 1914. On August 6, 1914, he was appointed assistant chief of the bureau, and on December 1, 1914, was made chief of the bureau. He took the place of Doctor Henshaw.

Mr. Stafford—And the salary has been $3,500 since 1917?

Mr. Lever—Yes.

Mr. Stafford—What is his age?

Mr. Lever—I should think that Doctor Nelson is round fifty years of age.

Mr. Stafford—He is not superannuated.

Mr. Lever—Oh, no, he is a very vigorous man.

Mr. Stafford—Mister Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Doctor Howard was refused his increase of pay because he was too old, "over sixty, perhaps nearer seventy."

Doctor Nelson was allowed his increase because he was not superannuated but in his prime, "round fifty years of age."

Now, as a matter of fact, Doctor Howard is more than two years younger than Doctor Nelson. Is it any wonder that scientific men of any attainments are reluctant to enter a service where the measure of the value of their services is set down in any such haphazard and casual way?

They were too fine and too patriotic to leave their posts.

"Under the compelling force of patriotism they made willing sacrifices during the war, but with the return of peace the government cannot expect to retain these employees indefinitely, because in justice to themselves and their families they will sooner or later accept the larger opportunities that are open to them in the world of business and industry unless the government proposes to pay them salaries that at least reasonably approach the value of their services."

"Only prompt action by the congress to build up a permanent and dignified civil service which will include men of great ability and high attainments can prevent mistakes and failures in the transaction of the public business, the consequences of which may be calamitous."

Ex-Representative Good, who was chairman of the appropriations committee of the house, is equally frank:

"Today duplication in the government service abounds on every hand. For example, eight different departments of the government, with large overhead organizations, are engaged in engineering work, in navigation, irrigation and drainage; eleven different bureaus are engaged in engineering research; twelve different organizations are engaged in road construction, while twelve, with large overhead organizations, are engaged in surveying and mapping. Sixteen different bureaus exercise jurisdiction over water-power development. Nine different organizations are collecting information on the consumption of coal. Forty-two different organizations, with overhead expenses, are dealing with the question of public health."

"The Treasury department, the War department, the Interior department and the Labor department each has a bureau dealing with the question of general education. These departments operate independently; instances of co-operation between them are exceptional. Each of these departments is manned at all times with an organization prepared to carry the peak of the load and maintains an expensive ready-to-serve personnel. A lack of co-operation in the executive departments necessarily leads to gross extravagance. The system is wrong, and congress alone can change the system."

FORMER SOLDIER AN ARTIST

John Avardo Will Be Sent to Rome by Veterans' Bureau to Complete His Course.

Before the war John Avardo was a waiter in a restaurant in Baltimore, Md. Now he is a student of art, and, according to the American Legion at Washington, D. C., will be sent to Rome to complete his course.

While recovering from war injuries at a Baltimore hospital, Avardo displayed considerable skill in moulding clay. The Veterans' bureau became interested in the case, and sent him to an art school where he shortly afterward won first prize in a modelling contest. His growing ability has led the bureau to undertake to send him abroad.

Avardo is only one of a number of cases of rehabilitation in which men who before the war were driving trucks or pushing shovels have discovered their true talents in the course of being vocationalized. Men who previously had been content with unskilled labor are now attending classes in auto-mechanics, radio-work, drafting, machine design, agriculture, and various other trades and professions.

"When we salute the flag"

Toledo (O.) Boy Wins First Prize in Essay Contest Conducted by Buckeye Legion Post.

It took the thirteen-year-old son of a sailor to give the best reason for saluting the Stars and Stripes. Mark Winchester of Toledo, O., received $15 for the work of his patriotic pen, winning first prize in the essay contest given by the American Legion post in Toledo.

"When we salute the flag," Mark wrote, "it is but an outward motion of the patriotic feeling within. It is not the mere physical movement that counts. It is what it signifies. When we salute the Stars and Stripes we show reverence for the flag that our forefathers made and preserved. It shows that we realize what the red, white and blue typifies."

A little Russian girl won the second prize. She said she liked to salute our flag because this country, unlike Russia, had so few pogroms and starving children.

EDITORIAL ON "CASH BONUS"

Chicago Newspaper Comments on Commander MacNider's Plan for Rotating Fund to Be Loaned.

"The soundest policy which has been offered with respect to a cash bonus" is the editorial comment of a Chicago paper on Hanford MacNider's plan for a rotating fund to be loaned out to needy ex-service men.

The editorial, in part, follows:

"In many cases the bonus, distributed to all alike, will be given to men who are not in actual need of it, to some who do not need it at all. All degrees of financial competency were in the army. For other men the allotment will not be enough. They need more credit than that to recover."

"Men who have no need of a bonus could take it without scruple if they intended to place it in the fund. Men who have need of it could get it from the fund, pay it back when they could, and keep the money available for continuing relief."

"Over."

Mr. Jessaway was fussy about the correct use of the English language, too fussy perhaps, and was always ready to find fault with offenders. Also he was in anything but a good temper as he sat down in his favorite restaurant.

"Give me a steak," he said, "and some corn and some baked potatoes."

"Baked potatoes are all over," said the girl.

"Oh, they're all over, huh," snorted Mr. Jessaway. "And what are they all over?"

"With," she replied simply.—American Legion Weekly.

MOTHER TO AMERICAN LEGION

Madame Schumann-Heink Continues Work of "The Greatest Organization in the World."

"To bring joy to the boys who so gloriously offered their lives" is the cause to which Madame Schumann-Heink, now sixty years old, has dedicated the remainder of her days. Back from a tour in the Orient, she has plunged into the task of being a mother to the American Legion, convinced, she says, that it is "the greatest organization in the world."

The role of mother has been Madame Schumann-Heink's greatest success. And now, with a son of her own and a million adopted sons, she finds as great an outlet for her lovable nature and her talent as in the war days, when she spent much of her time in camps, singing, working with her needle, and spreading cheer.

"I have never been happier," said the great star, who, in spite of her years, still has the grace and the color of youth.

SAM SOO HOO DIED FOR FLAG

Body of Patriotic Chinaman, Born and Educated in America, Sent to China for Burial.

The last journey of Sam Soo Hoo, killed in action in the Ourcq valley, is told by the American Legion Weekly.

Of Chinese parentage on both sides, but born and educated in San Francisco, Sam, when he became a young man, went to China and married, thinking some day to return to America. When in 1917 news came that America had entered the war, Sam kissed his perplexed little bride and said: "I must go."

Time passed, and a white cross stood over all that was mortal of Sam Soo Hoo. A Red Cross man came along and took a picture of the grave, sending it on to the widow, who wondered what it meant. And then a request came from relatives that the body be sent to China. So now, close by Jia gi Chuen, just outside the south gate of Canton, the slender matron waits the return of her husband, where, draped in the flag of the country for which he died, he will be laid in the dust with his honored fathers.

ONLY OFFICER TO SURVIVE

Capt. Bert Rugh Saw All Fellow Commanders of His Battalion Fall in Battle.

The only officer in his battalion to survive, Bert Rugh's military record reads like a chronology of the tides of battle during the dark years of the war. His experiences with the Canadian army, however, are lost in his absorption in the business of putting up a $100,000 club house for Cedar Rapids (Ia.) post of the American Legion. This, when completed, probably will be recognized as the finest Legion home in the country.

Rugh began his military career as a buck private in Company C, Forty-ninth Iowa volunteer infantry, serving in Cuba from April, 1908, to May, 1909. In 1914 he joined the Second Field troop of the Canadian Engineers, went overseas, and was promoted to a lieutenant. During the course of events, every other officer in the battalion met his death. Three of Rugh's orderlies were killed in action, and in one attack Rugh was the only member of his company to come through alive.

Carrying On With the American Legion

Liberal (Kan.) post of the American Legion is building a swimming pool in the city's park and digging holes for tree planting.

On the brink of Kilauea, one of Hawaii's active volcanoes, a health resort for service men has been erected by citizens of the island.

The United States army costs $3.22 per capita. Great Britain, with her many colonies pays $13.25 per capita; France, $22.52; Italy, $6.70 and Japan, $5.53.

Studebaker OUT OF THE YEARS OF AUTOMOBILE BUILDING COMES ---THE LEADER!

In any field of endeavor only one thing can establish Leadership: THE CONFIDENCE OF THE PUBLIC. To win this confidence in any enterprise means success—to lose it means destruction. The formula is simple—but inexorable.

The public does not give its confidence lightly. It is a prize beyond price to be worked for with untiring effort, unwavering purpose and immutable faith. The public is patient, the public watches, and finally the public passes judgment.

The public has watched the development of the automobile industry, watched it from its earliest pioneering, watched it through the years of its advancement. Hundreds of builders of automobiles have made their bids to the public for its confidence.

And finally the public has passed judgment. It has given its confidence to Studebaker. Studebaker has been acclaimed the Leader. Studebaker has won the reward of its 70 years of unfaltering devotion to a fixed principle—THE PRINCIPLE OF COMPLETE SATISFACTION TO EVERY ONE WHO DEALS WITH THE HOUSE OF STUDEBAKER.

To the dealer who sells Studebaker Cars, Studebaker leadership is an asset of definite value. There is an opportunity here and there for dealers who value this sort of asset.

Is that Check Safe?

Suppose it falls into the hands of a crook, and because it was drawn on paper that was not insured, he raises it? Not a pleasant thought, is it? Of course the possibility of this happening may be remote, but it does exist, and YOUR check may be the next one to be raised. That's why we have the SUPER-SAFETY INSURED checks, to prevent this.

This protection costs our depositors nothing whatever. Come in and let us give you a book of SUPER-SAFETY INSURED CHECKS.

Feel Stiff and Achy After Every Cold?

Do You Have Constant Backache? Feel Old and Lame and Suffer Sharp, Rheumatic Pains? Then Look to Your Kidneys!

DOES every cold, chill or attack of grip leave you worn-out and utterly miserable? Do you feel old and lame, stiff and rheumatic? Does your back ache with a dull, unceasing throb, until it seems you just can't stand it any longer?

Then look to your kidneys! Grip, colds and chills are mighty hard on the kidneys. They fill the blood with poisons and impurities that the kidneys must filter off. The kidneys weaken under this rush of new work; become congested and inflamed.

It's little wonder, then, that every cold leaves you with torturing backache, rheumatic pains, headaches, dizziness and annoying bladder irregularities.

But don't worry! Simply realize that your kidneys are overworked at such times and need assistance. Get a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and give your weakened kidneys the help they need. Assist them, also, by drinking pure water freely, eating lightly and getting plenty of fresh air and rest. Doan's Kidney Pills have helped thousands and should help you. Ask your neighbor!

"Use Doan's," Say These Grateful Folks:

J. A. Roberts, bookkeeper, Park Ave., Brownsville, Tenn., says: "I took cold easily and it always settled on my kidneys, causing them to get out of order. I suffered intensely from pains across my back and I couldn't rest comfortably at night. My kidneys didn't act properly and I felt drowsy and tired. Upon a neighbor's advice I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills and they entirely rid me of this trouble and I cannot recommend them too highly."

Mrs. Joe Lunn, 314 Bridge St., Franklin, Tenn., says: "My kidneys troubled me and I had lumbago and severe pains through my back and hips. I felt dull and lame mornings and had no ambition for my housework. Dizzy headaches made me miserable and my kidneys acted irregularly. I used Doan's Kidney Pills and they were just the remedy for me and soon rid me of the trouble."

OVER THREE YEARS LATER, Mrs. Lunn added: "Whenever my kidneys need attention I use Doan's and they never fail to cure me of the attack."

And That's That. On Eighteenth street yesterday. Two negroes driving motors. One driving truck thrusts out his arm for a turn. Other driver, coming from behind, sounds horn and attempts to pass. Both cars stop. Fenders touching, both drivers pile out to argue. "Didn't you see my arm?" asks the truck driver. "Didn't you hear my horn?" counters the other. "Sure I heard your horn." "Why didn't you stop, then?" "Cause, ain't my arm as good as your horn?" Drivers get back in and beta machines proceed.—Kansas City Star.

"What do you think of Mr. Brown?" Dorothy True asked with an effort to appear casual in her interest. Dorothy was the younger of the two pretty True girls—the brown-haired, blue-eyed sister who went in for athletics and wore boyish clothes.

"I don't know as I had thought yet," answered Alicia True, two years older than Dorothy, the sister with light hair and languid brown eyes, with a taste for domesticity. "Why do you ask?"

"For no reason especially," lied Dorothy. "Of course I know you don't go in for analyzing characters the way I do, but he's been coming to see you so often and—"

"I'm not at all sure he comes just to see me," smiled Alicia. "You can have him if you want."

"Thanks awfully," snapped Dorothy. "You needn't treat me like a child. Don't I notice how you and he are always exchanging glances. I guess I've eyes in my head. But what do you think of him?"

"Oh, I think he is tallish and broad shouldered, with a taste for gray tweed and green neckties and—"

"Piffle," ejaculated Dorothy, and then, "What's the use?"

With the younger sister, with a second effort to appear casual, took a folded afternoon paper that she had been sitting on from its hiding place, rose, walked to the fireplace and neatly deposited it above the blazing logs.

Alicia was too intent on the needlework in her hands to wonder why Dorothy had burned the paper or to comment on her curiosity concerning Mr. Brown, the young man whom they had recently met at a dance in town, and who had been coming out from the city to the True home with considerable frequency ever since.

In the afternoon paper that was now blazing up the chimney was a scare heading that had attracted Dorothy's attention, to an account of a culprit whose real name was Glennon, but who went by a half-dozen or so aliases. Hence her curiosity concerning Mr. John Brown, Culprits seeking aliases, reasoned Dorothy, would always select some name like John Brown or Henry Smith—colorless names that would suggest no family relationships in particular. The paper had described Glennon as a professional heart-breaker. He was now wanted by the police for having made away with $500 that he had "borrowed" from a young woman in the city whose heart he had won as a means of gaining confidence. A dozen other young women in different parts of the country were ready to make similar charges. In some cases he had disappeared with valuable jewelry.

"The young man is fairly tall, well built and of singularly fascinating appearance and manner—or at least this is the opinion of the young women who will appear against him." That is what the paper said. Dorothy had nodded her head affirmatively. John Brown was certainly entirely fascinating, conceded Dorothy.

The night after Dorothy's discovery she lay awake for many hours making plans that were deep and full of concern for Alicia. It would be a mistake to tell Alicia, because she would never keep the secret. John would know that he was suspected and escape. The important thing was not only to protect Alicia from falling deeply in love with the culprit—if this were possible—but to get sufficient evidence against him to make it possible to arrest him before he suspected that he had been discovered.

This could be done, Dorothy decided, by getting him to transfer his attentions from Alicia to herself. If Alicia felt that it was Dorothy instead of herself for whom he cared she was not the sort of sister who would interfere. So Dorothy decided to make it appear that Glennon, alias for the time John Brown, was really her admirer.

She would encourage him, see him as much as possible and watch him for suspicious actions. This was not especially like Dorothy. She was pretty enough, and she knew it in a vague way, but she had never been a "boy girl" and she was ignorant of the first principles of coquetry. Still she would play the role.

How proud Alicia and her parents would be of her when she caught the villain in the act and thus saved her sister from being another of his victims and revenge the others whom he had wronged. No wonder Dorothy lay awake that night hours after the rest of the True family were lost in slumber.

Mr. Brown called the next evening. It appeared that Alicia or Mrs. True had asked him to dinner. Unfortunately for her plans, thought Dorothy, she had not been told of Mr. Brown's expected presence or she would have changed into her most becoming home evening frock. As it was, she came in from the country club after he had arrived and had to appear at dinner still in her boyish sport clothes. She determined, however, to let her charm and sprightliness of manner make up for the lack of winsome clothes.

Dorothy realized that she was in a measure succeeding even before dinner was over. She realized that Mr. Brown was watching her, that often he laughed with a mingling of amusement and admiration when she talked. Once she noticed that Alicia's eyes and his met and there seemed to be an exchange of message between them. For a moment after this Dorothy felt a suspicion of what one more schooled in the game of love would have recognized as jealousy. Of course Dorothy felt fascinated by the stranger, but this would not deter her from playing her heroic role like a true heroine.

When the evening in the True drawing room was half spent Dorothy was a little surprised when the fascinating Mr. Brown made his way to her side and said, sotto voce, "Suppose you come out for a little run in the country. I brought my car tonight—there's a fine moon. Do you think your mother would let us?"

It was easily arranged with Mrs. True, and Dorothy went to her room for her cape. "Alicia," Dorothy heard the alleged Mr. Brown say as she was going upstairs, "I want to ask a favor of you." Dorothy lingered on the stairs and heard the whispered conversation in the hall below. "I'm sorry, but could you let me have a five-spot till tomorrow? I left my wallet in the office and I may run out of gasoline. Don't let Dorothy know I'm such a piker." Then came Alicia's voice laughing: "I haven't a five-dollar bill, but here's a ten."

Assuredly the plot was thickening. Dorothy seized her cape in her room and paused just long enough before her dressing table to make sure that she didn't look a fright, and to take an old revolver from its hiding place in her dressing table drawer. To be sure it was unloaded, and it was of ancient make. She had found it in the attic and remembered it as one her great-grandfather had carried through the Civil war. Still it would answer the purpose.

The motor trip started auspiciously for Dorothy's plan. In fact, the plot thickened rather more rapidly than she had anticipated. Two blocks away from the True house the alleged Mr. Brown took a hand from the wheel, groped for one of Dorothy's and found it. "If I could hope that you could ever care for me," he began. No wonder, thought Dorothy, as she yielded her hand, that he had been a successful heartbreaker.

"Dorothy, dear," the villain continued, "I have felt sure until tonight that you hadn't given me a thought. But tonight you have seemed just a little kinder. Dorothy, dear—" The car stopped under the shade of an old elm, and Dorothy felt two strong arms about her. She turned her face away, but she felt a kiss—Dorothy's first of the sort—on her cheek.

So the villain played his game. For a moment the heroine forgot her role, and in a choked voice said something about not disliking him at all.

Then a car showed its searchlights ahead and Mr. Brown sat erect. "I think we'd better go to the garage. If you don't object," he said. "I'm almost out of gas."

The increasing glare of the lights from the oncoming car brought back Dorothy's composure. "To the garage!" she mocked, feeling for her funny old revolver in her cape pocket, and then flourishing it. "To the police station, you mean. I hope you have enough gas for that. Try any tricks and I'll fire."

The lights of the oncoming car must have shown Mr. Brown the dilapidated condition of Dorothy's firearm. At any rate he seemed not in the least afraid for he backed his car to the shade of the elm tree again, waited till the car was behind them and then crushing Dorothy and her poor old revolver in his arms, demanded an explanation. He had never even heard of Glennon.

Then they went to the garage and then back to the True house. Twenty minutes before, when they had just left the house Mr. True had commented to Mrs. True: "Seems as if our little Dorothy is rather shining up to this Mr. Brown. Never saw her take an interest in any of the boys before. But he's the right sort—"

"Yes, and I know Dorothy is interested in him," smiled Alicia. "Poor child, she thinks he is quite fascinating. Love surely is blind."

No one was very much surprised when Dorothy and John Brown returned, asking the family's blessings on their plighted troth.

SO THIS IS THE ARTICHOKE!

The Bud of the Mediterranean Thistle is a Table Delicacy in California.

In the backyards of San Francisco and the Half Moon Bay region a giant thistle is being cultivated for its food value—a giant thistle of Mediterranean origin with spines which are both repellent and cruel, but a large purple flower most gloriously scented which holds an irresistible lure for the bees; a giant thistle which so loves its adopted home that it refuses to be grown elsewhere in spite of the many attempts to do so.

This same thistle with its wonderful, big buds and great Corinthian leaves with their prickly spines is known to the consumer as the artichoke; and such a delicacy do we regard the bud of this same flower that it sells for a higher price than the famous Oregon apples or California raisins and Florida oranges. Indeed, in our cities not only do we find it displayed in the fancy grocery, but not unusual is it to find the pushcart peddler devoting a part of his limited space to the same delicacy, and both the rich man and the poor man buy it—often paying as high as a quarter apiece.—Scientific American.

Ratification of Yap Treaty Indicates Other Pacts Will Go Through Senate.

NOT ADMITTED BY ENEMIES

Fight to Modify Volstead Act Begun by Federation of Labor—New Plan to Finance Bonus—President Asks Congress for Ship Subsidy.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

IN THE preliminary bouts of the treaty fight in the senate the administration has scored victories which lead Senator Lodge and others to predict certain triumph in the main contest over the four-power Pacific pact, as well as in the other bouts.

Expression of this confidence came after the senate, on Wednesday, had ratified the treaty with Japan concerning Yap. This is not properly one of the Washington conference series of treaties, but its acceptance was considered necessary before action is taken on the other Pacific treaties. It puts an end to the dispute between this country and Japan by recognizing the Japanese mandate over Yap and at the same time securing America's cable rights there.

The final vote on the Yap pact was 67 to 22 and was preceded by the voting down of a number of reservations which certain Democratic senators thought necessary to make American rights on the island entirely secure. Thirteen Democrats voted for ratification, and three Republicans—Borah, France and Johnson—against it. Although the administration forces said they were entirely satisfied with the vote, the "irreconcilables" also professed to be jubilant. The latter asserted they had made small effort to defeat this treaty and that they were confident they could muster enough more votes to beat the four-power pact.

On motion of Senator Lodge the senate immediately took up the four-power treaty, and the indications were that the debate on that would last several weeks. As it was reported to the senate by the committee on foreign relations, it carries but the one innocuous interpretative reservation that was approved by President Harding.

To Borah, Johnson, France and a few other senators might well be applied a sentence from one of the late Ambassador Page's letters during the war: "In the United States we lie down every night in George Washington's feather bed of no entangling alliances." During the debate Borah declared he would support the Yap treaty if he could be sure that it would get rid of America's one-fifth interest in the mandated islands of the south seas.

"I cannot imagine a more serious entanglement," said Senator Borah. "Then owning a one-fifth interest in these islands. We are becoming very seriously involved and more so every day."

Senator Reed of Missouri deplored the refusal of the nations to recognize the principle of self-determination in dealing with the question of Yap prohibition. He declared that the Yap-landers had never been consulted as to whether they "liked likker or not." He drew a "dismal picture of thirsty Yaps groaning under the tyranny of a Japanese Volstead." The treaty as ratified applies the prohibition amendment only to natives.

THIS mention of prohibition leads one to venture the personal opinion that if there is any force that can bring about the modification of the Volstead act so that the country will once more have its beer and light wines, that force has just been set in motion. The executive council of the American Federation of Labor has taken up this cause and seeks to make of it a political issue in the forthcoming congressional campaign. It issued a declaration in which the Volstead enforcement act is denounced a moral failure and a dangerous breeder of discontent and contempt for law, and which concludes:

"We urge that all citizens in every walk of life demand from their representatives and senators in Washington immediate relief from the unwarranted restriction contained in the Volstead act; and we likewise suggest to the citizenship of our country the wisdom and advisability of bearing in mind the attitude toward this issue of office holders and aspirants to office in coming elections in order that there may be restored to the people the lawful use of wholesome beer and light wines, which, under the provisions of the eighteenth amendment can and should be rightfully declared as non-intoxicating beverages."

The executive council asserts it holds "that the eighteenth amendment under a reasonable and proper legislative interpretation would be beneficial to our country and would have the support of the great majority of our people." But the council says an exhaustive investigation which it has conducted shows these effects of the Volstead act:

"1. A general disregard of the law among all classes, including those who made the law.

"2. Creation of thousands of moonshiners.

"3. Creation of an army of bootleggers.

"4. An amazing increase in the traffic in poisons and deadly concoctions and drugs.

"5. An increased rate of insanity, blindness, and crime among the users of these concoctions and drugs.

"6. Increase in unemployment, due to losses of employment by workers in forty-five industries directly or indirectly connected with the manufacture of liquors.

"7. Increase in taxes to city, state, and national governments amounting to approximately $1,000,000,000 per year."

REPUBLICAN members of the house ways and means committee having rejected the sales tax plan for financing the soldiers' bonus, the committee went on trying to devise other schemes, with the alternative of adopting a bill that contains no financing feature. A subcommittee suggested one plan which would not involve a heavy drain on the treasury during the next two years. This contemplates the elimination of a cash bonus. Adjusted service certificates would be issued equal to the sum of the adjusted service pay of the veteran ($1 a day for domestic service and $1.25 a day for foreign service, less the $50 bonus paid at the time of discharge), increased by 40 per cent, plus interest thereon for twenty years at the rate of 4½ per cent a year, compounded annually. The total face value thus would be approximately 3.38 times the amount of cash that a veteran would have received under the cash feature.

Immediately after the certificate was received the service man could obtain from a bank an amount equal to 50 per cent of the total of the adjusted service pay. If at the expiration of three years the sum thus obtained, plus interest, had not been paid by the service man, the bank could make demand on the federal treasury for the amount due. The government thus would take over and carry the loan.

Some members feared the borrowings under this plan might affect the financial situation harmfully, so treasury experts were called in to advise the committee on that and other points. If the scheme is feasible and goes through the government would not have to pay any cash for two or three years except for administrative purposes.

THE house appropriations committee gave the navy another severe jolt last week, reducing the deficiency item for naval fuel for the remainder of the fiscal year to $3,200,000—little more than half what the navy department estimated was needed. It was predicted that Secretary Denby would be forced to issue orders forbidding all naval ships to operate under steam for the rest of the year. This would mean that the vessels must remain at anchor or tied up at docks, and that all training for war service must be discontinued.

Secretary Denby, Rear Admiral Wilson, superintendent of the naval academy, and Rear Admiral Washington, chief of the bureau of navigation, are trying to combat the movement in the house to turn back to civil life the 541 members of the academy class that graduates next June. They told the house naval committee that these men were needed, that the three other classes should be allowed to graduate and that there should be no reduction in the number admitted to the academy next autumn.

PRESIDENT Harding last week made a long and earnest appeal to congress to give direct aid to American shipping, and immediately after the delivery of his address bills prepared by the shipping board and embodying the administration recommendations were introduced by Representative Green of Massachusetts, chairman of the house committee on merchant marine and fisheries, and by Senator Jones of Washington, chairman of the senate committee on commerce.

The program embodied in these measures would cost the government about $15,000,000 the first year, and the annual expense ultimately might reach $20,000,000. Besides direct compensation to American vessels engaged in foreign trade the program involves the sale of government ships at prices based on present market values, construction loans to private companies, and various forms of indirect aid.

IN HIS ship subsidy address to congress the President took occasion to reiterate his approval of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project, and that was also the topic for a lively debate before the National Rivers and Harbors congress in Washington last week. The project was there championed by Gov. Henry J. Allen of Kansas and H. H. Merrick of Chicago, and was opposed by Gov. Nathan Miller of New York. Allen and Merrick set forth spiritedly the demand of the middle west for an adequate outlet to the sea for its products, and argued that the proposed waterway could be financed from the 1,000,000 horsepower to be developed. Governor Allen said the New York barge canal was all right so far as it went, but its capacity was not over one-twentieth of that demanded by the 18 states on whose behalf he spoke.

Governor Miller attacked the project as impossible of successful completion and not in the best interests of the United States. He especially protested against the proposed method of financing it, saying the waterway rights of the state of New York should not be taken to pay the bill.

ENGLAND is enjoying a real political crisis, in which the conservatives are steadily losing strength and the liberals under the leadership of Herbert Asquith are gaining. The details do not mean much to most of us, but there is great interest in one of the possible results—the retirement of Premier Lloyd George. He has been much annoyed by "insulting dictation" and criticism from some of the Tory leaders and is especially irritated by Sir George Younger, boss of the Unionist organization, who vetoed Lloyd George's plan for a general election immediately after the conference at Cannes. It is believed the premier will resign unless an election is ordered very soon.

GREAT BRITAIN abandoned its protectorate over Egypt on Tuesday and set free the land of the Pharaohs. The terms of the withdrawal were presented to Sultan Hussein Kemal by Lord Allenby and the fact was announced in parliament by Premier Lloyd George. The British government reserves to itself security of the communications of the British empire in Egypt, the defense of Egypt against foreign aggression or interference and the protection of foreign interests and the minorities in Egypt.

LOYD GEORGE and Poincaré in their week-end conference settled a lot of disputed matters between England and France, and, especially, came to full agreement on the Anglo-French alliance. The treaty will pledge England to come immediately to France's aid if she is attacked by Germany without provocation. England also will support France in enforcing German disarmament and both nations will act together to protect Poland from Germany. The alliance will run for 20 years. In all this France seems to have gained her ends.

PROVISION MADE FOR PETS

Seemingly it is Not Unusual to Make Bequests by Which Animals Benefit.

An elderly French spinster died, leaving a will bequeathing most of her property to charity and a substantial sum to "my silent, sympathetic and best-loved friend, Minnette." Minnette was her cat. A Frenchman was moved by this incident to investigate the subject and he found that cats, among all animals, have most frequently been made legatees.

In 1671 a noted player on the harp and flute, Jeanne Felix Dupuis, employed her executor to give the keeper of two cats 30 sous a week for their food, which she specified should be meat broth, "of the kind we ourselves eat, rich and sufficient without being sked out by bread crumbs, and served upon individual plates, belonging one to each cat." Her relatives broke the will, and this provision of separate plates for the pussies was a point upon which they strongly dwelt in the attempt to prove that her mind was unbalanced.

OBEDIENCE AS AN INSTINCT

Apparently Birds Possess and Exercise It Even Before They Have Left the Shell.

The obedience of young birds to the mother has been the subject of many stories. Two young thrushes had remained perfectly still, while Mr. Robinson was passing near a nest when he saw some young ones leave it and disappear into the water in that wonderful way common to all amphibious creatures right up to the hippopotamus, almost without a ripple. He found in the nest one egg, which was being cracked from the inside—all birds are hatched "with a little projection something like a gazer's diamond on their bills for this purpose—and the youngster was cheeping as it wriggled slowly round. As he watched, back came the mother. She saw him and gave one short, harsh cry. Immediately the little bird in the egg stopped cheeping and made no further sound or movement while he remained. There was a case of instinctive obedience even before the bird was hatched.—London Times.

ROAD BUILDING

DEVICE FOR TREATING SAND

Engineers of California Bureau of Public Roads Use Blower to Obtain Material.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A new method of treating a local sand to make it conform to the specifications for a concrete road has been adopted by the engineers of the bureau of public works in charge of California federal-aid project No. 41. Near the south end of the project no local sand could be found which would conform to the requirements of the specifications approved by the bureau of roads of the United States Department of Agriculture. These prescribed that the sand should contain no more than 5 per cent of material which would pass a 100-mesh sieve. The local sand analyzed about 15 to 20 per cent, which was entirely too high to permit its use.

Instead of falling back upon the importation of suitable sand from another locality, the engineers devised a plant for blowing the fine particles from the sand. This district is extremely arid, and in summer the temperature sometimes mounts to 120 degrees in the shade, so that the sand is very dry when worked. The device used consists of an ordinary conveyor, which lifts the sand to a revolving screen. Material which will pass a one-fourth-inch mesh is discharged into a hopper under the screen and then through a narrow opening into a storage bin below. In falling from the hopper to the bin, the sheet of sand passes directly in front of a nozzle, which directs against it a current of air from a centrifugal air blower. By means of a pressure regulator at the blower, the velocity of the air at the nozzle can be so controlled as to blow from the falling sand any desired percentage of the finer material.

The blower is operated by a belt from the same gas engine which operates the conveyor and revolving screen. The whole device is compact and inexpensive. The result is a satisfactory sand obtained at less cost than by any other method. The success of the plan depends, of course, on the dryness of the sand. If it were necessary to dry it, the increased cost of treatment might make the importation of suitable material preferable.

TOURIST TRAFFIC PAYS BIG

Increase of Americans into Canada Expected to Pay for Ontario's Highway System.

It is anticipated that American tourist traffic will pay for the installation and upkeep of Ontario's highway system. This traffic has increased remarkably since the Toronto-Hamilton highway was built, and already annual revenue from this source runs into millions of dollars. During 1920 approximately 37,500 American motorists crossed the border into Ontario, remaining from one hour to six months.

Cattle Dealers Who Do Not Favor Measures Are Influenced by Selfish Motives.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Only a few people are opposed to regulating traffic in tuberculous live stock, but their opposition is sometimes effective, and several cases of the kind have been traced by the United States Department of Agriculture. However, the department believes that cattle dealers who do not favor tuberculosis eradication are influenced by selfish motives and do not represent the true spirit of live-stock owners and others interested in healthier and better domestic animals on American farms.

Although many states have suitable laws to protect farmers and other live-stock owners against traffic in tuberculous animals, the practice continues in some localities. Here is an instance: In Massachusetts a purebred Holstein cow, valued at $100, was disposed of as a reactor; but instead of being slaughtered or segregated she was later sold to a state institution for $300. The herd at this institution had previously been free of tuberculosis. It was being improved by the purchase of new animals, and every available precaution was taken to see that they were healthy. Recently this herd was re-tested and three reactors were found, one of which was the cow in question. All showed well-marked lesions of tuberculosis on post-mortem examination.

There is no law or regulation in Massachusetts preventing the sale or requiring the segregation of reactors. A few cattle dealers led the opposition to a bill before the last general court providing for the control and sale of animals reacting to the tuberculin test. Owing to the importance of eradicating tuberculosis from live stock, the Department of Agriculture is furnishing to the public full information regarding the nature of the disease and the way to get rid of it.

ACCREDITED-HERD CAMPAIGN

Illustration of Manner in Which Owners Are Given Protection Against Tuberculosis.

The way herd owners value protection against bovine tuberculosis is illustrated, says a specialist in the dairy division, United States Department of Agriculture, by the experience of the Bonner Springs (Kansas) Bull association. Every member of the association, 11 in number, signed up for the accredited-herd campaign. They had 104 animals tested, and in 8 of the 11 herds no reactors whatever were found. Of the other three herds, each had just one animal affected by the disease.

At first sight some of the members thought the effort had been needless and not enough results shown. But when it was considered that the object sought was not merely to eradicate tuberculosis after it had appeared but to protect the herds against exposure to the disease, it was plain that the object sought had been gained.

REMOVE WARTS FROM CALVES

Small Tumor-Like Growths on Various Parts of Body Are Not Difficult to Destroy.

Calves are frequently troubled with small tumor-like growths on the lips, around the eyes, on the ears, and at the tail head. Occasionally other parts of the body are affected as well. Warts may best be removed by snipping them off with sharp scissors. A strong thread or a horse hair may be used in their removal by looping it over them and then by the application of force slowly severing them at their base. After they have been removed the roots should be cauterized with tincture of iron, glacial acetic acid, or lunar caustic.

PRODUCING MILK FOR PROFIT

Like Real Business Man Farmer Can Not Afford to Keep Unprofitable Producers.

The way to make money out of the production of milk, is to begin at home. Weed out unprofitable producers. No real business man will keep a workman in his employ a week if he is an unprofitable producer, and the cow is the dairyman's machine—the dairyman's workman.

Cat Mothers Fox Pups.

At Ontario reader writes that her cat fostered three fox pups since they were two weeks old. The pups were taken from the mother because it was feared they might chill. The cat had five kittens which were disposed of, and the foxes were promptly adopted in their place. The foxes are now over three months old and although larger than their foster mother, are still fond of her. They are kept now in a wire pen and kitty is quite content to remain with them all day long, enjoying an occasional frolic.
